Occupational Health and Safety

Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) is an interdisciplinary activity related to the prevention of occupational risks inherent in each work.

According to the International Labor Organization, occupational health and safety cover the social, physical, and mental well-being of employees as a whole. Occupational Health and Safety, therefore, requires a broad approach that requires interaction with scientific fields such as occupational medicine, public health, industrial engineering, ergonomics, chemistry, and psychology.

World Day for Safety and Health at Work

World Occupational Health and Safety Day is celebrated every year on 28 April. Started by the International Labor Organization (ILO) in 2003, the initiative is an international campaign promoting safe, healthy and decent work around the world.

World Day for Safety and Health at Work 2022, focuses on strategies to strengthen national and international occupational health and safety (OHS) systems, encouraging all relevant parties to act together to create a positive health and safety culture.

A white hard hat is placed on top of a wooden frame. Inside the frame is a black chalkboard. The background is dark grey with a yellow and olive green diagonal stripe in the top right corner.

Health and safety culture is examined in three main categories:

Organizational – safety and health-related policies, procedures and systems

Psychological – individual perceptions, attitudes and values

Behavioral – what people do, health and safety behaviors

Psychological and Social Dimensions

The health and safety culture is a reflection of the values, attitudes, perceptions, competencies and behaviors of employees.

Management systems that include activities against conditions of health deterioration that may have an adverse effect not only on the physical but also on the mental or cognitive state of a person; It is known that it plays an important role in creating a positive occupational health and safety culture.
